Responding to Multiple Disadvantage: Intersectionality in Policy and Practice

The conference will explore the concept of 'intersectionality' in all its facets as it becomes more and more prominent in discussions around violence against women and girls (VAWG) policy development and service delivery and how best to meet the unique needs and experiences of all survivors.

We have an exciting line-up of speakers from a range of specialist agencies. They will illustrate the importance of an intersectional approach as an essential framework and tool to understand the complex reality and multiple layers of discrimination individuals may face.

The second part of the day will be a set of interactive workshops. It will focus on the practical implementation of intersectionality and what this may look like in your daily work as professionals working both at a strategic and operational level within local authorities or the public and voluntary sector more broadly.
